

KENTUCKY CHAMBER “All In” on Tort Reform

Uncertainty and unlimited liability are the hallmark features of Kentucky’s “wild west” legal liability environment. While it may make for good movies, it does not make for a good business climate. That’s why we need tort reform.

For most Kentucky businesses and health care providers, it isn’t a question of if they will face a lawsuit from the powerful trial attorney bar, but when.

The U.S. Chamber ranks Kentucky’s legal liability climate at 42nd, one of the worst in the nation, driving many businesses to operate elsewhere to avoid our sky-high insurance costs and unlimited risks.

Make no mistake — the legal liability climate is an economic growth and development issue.

The current system creates challenges for Kentucky businesses and acts as a barrier to economic development, limiting the Commonwealth’s ability to attract and foster the next generation of employers, health care providers, and innovators.

Governor Bevin acknowledged that this is a major issue for Kentucky during his address at our recent Kentucky Chamber Day event, saying, “Kentucky should not be a playground for trial attorneys.”

The Kentucky Chamber wholeheartedly agrees. The Chamber is pushing for commonsense legal liability reforms during the 2018 session to remove some of these barriers for growth.

- Senate Bill 2 is a bill to allow a constitutional amendment to give voters, via their elected representatives, the ability to limit jury awards. Filed by state Sen. Ralph Alvarado, it would allow the General Assembly to establish such limits. Currently, there is no limit, and awards can run into the millions of dollars. Often its not an outrageous jury award that threatens Kentucky employers; it’s the risk that drives employers and insurance companies to pay expensive settlements.

- Senate Bill 20, also sponsored by Sen. Ralph Alvarado, is an omnibus bill including reforms such as requiring an affidavit of merit to reduce the number of frivolous claims, providing peer review protections, establishing caps on attorney’s contingency fees to ensure the injured party receives the majority of the money in a settlement, and adding “statement of sympathy” language that allows medical providers to show compassion in the event of a patient’s death without the fear of a lawsuit claiming they are at fault. Alvarado has pointed to Delaware’s standing as the top-ranking state for legal liability many years in a row and said his bill will mirror the policies Delaware has in place in order to improve Kentucky’s climate.

- House Bill 4, sponsored by Rep. Addia Wuchner, would allow medical professionals the ability to discuss and compare best practices in their fields without the fear of litigation.

- House Bill 198, sponsored by Rep. Jason Nemes, would create transparency, set reasonable limits on contingency fees, and codify recent case law requirements to ensure the state remains in control of any litigation involving contingency fee counsel. It is time for Kentucky to join the more than 20 other states which have instituted these responsible good government reforms, putting public good above private profit.

- House Bill 293, sponsored by Rep. Joe Fischer, is legislation seeking to bring changes to the way asbestos-related lawsuits are handled in the state.

The bills described above are critical to ensure 2018 represents an opportunity to encourage businesses to locate here, rather than driving them away.

Kentucky should not be a playground for trial attorneys.
— Matt Bevin, Governor”

NEED FOR SUSTAINABLE STATE BUDGET AND PENSION REFORMS KEY THEMES OF

Leadership at 2018 Chamber Day

Gov. Matt Bevin and legislative leaders from the House and Senate took the stage at the 23rd Annual Chamber Day to discuss priorities of the coming year with pension reforms and the struggle to find a way to craft a sustainable state budget being a key theme among all speakers.

Gov. Bevin said the next two-year state budget that must be crafted this session will be "brutal" because "for the first time, we are going to pay our bills and pay pension obligations."

The governor noted pension costs currently take up 20 percent of the state's budget and stated nothing else can be funded if the issue is not addressed. Because of that, Gov. Bevin said a pension reform bill must pass, "and it will."

In his first speech at Kentucky Chamber Day, House Speaker Pro Tem David Osborne said the legislature is facing many choices no one wants to make, but stressed changes to pensions, taxes, and the budget must be made. Osborne also thanked the work of the business community on such issues over the years.

The Republican leaders echoed many of the Chamber's legislative priorities with Osborne stating the House will focus on essential skills, workers' compensation system reforms, criminal justice improvements, tort reform, and others as top priorities of the state House. He also focused on a balanced and sustainable budget as well as a top-notch workforce in Kentucky.

Senate President Robert Stivers told the crowd funding needs for pensions, education, and infrastructure will be top priorities in 2018. He also stressed the successes of 2017 session with new laws like right to work, repeal of the prevailing wage, and others that have helped create jobs in Kentucky.

Senate Minority Leader Ray Jones said issues like pension and tax reform must be addressed across party lines for Kentucky to move forward.

And House Minority Leader Rocky Adkins stressed the importance of education funding and low-cost energy while highlighting the need to produce a budget and pension reform in 2018.

Workforce Summit Highlights

PROBLEMS AND PROGRESS IN KENTUCKY'S WORKFORCE

As Kentucky's employers are searching for innovative solutions to their workforce needs, the Kentucky Chamber hosted the 3rd Annual Workforce Summit where employers got an inside look into the strategies being used by other companies, organizations and government entities to turn around the Commonwealth's workforce crisis.

Kentucky's Workforce and Progress Challenges, a report serving as an update to the Kentucky Chamber's 2015 Workforce Report, made its debut at the summit.

To kick off the summit, a Global Futurist, Jack Uldrich, offered a look into the future of industries, saying he cannot think of an industry that will not see exponential changes. Uldrich shared this statistic: "65% of students starting elementary school today will eventually work in jobs that don't exist yet."

Workforce and Education Cabinet Secretary Hal Heiner said one of the Cabinet's main focuses is finding the link between people, training and jobs, citing Kentucky as 47th in the nation for adult workforce participation. Secretary Heiner encouraged employers to become more engaged in K-12 because students' academics excel when they can visualize themselves in a career. Derek Redelman of Strada Education Network broke down Kentucky-specific survey results, showing need for change in the education system so students feel more confident about their career path.

Jason Tyszko from the U.S. Chamber Foundation said Talent Pipeline Management (TPM) was created because the current system is not working for employers, stating workforce is the reason 40% of employers cannot take on new business. Kim Menke of Toyota pointed out public-private partnerships are important to successful TPM systems, a more streamlined transition from education to workforce.

Kentucky Economic Development Cabinet Secretary Terry Gill delivered the keynote address, focusing on the role of workforce development in economic success. Secretary Gill said workforce is always in the top-three qualifications for companies who submit project requests. He stated, "99% of jobs added to the economy in the past 5 years are held by workers with some level of education training after high school," highlighting the need for Kentuckians to seek a form of postsecondary training to fill the 70,000 positions Kentucky needs by 2020.

Addiction and incarceration were noted as two of the top reasons for Kentucky's low workforce participation rate, and Tim Robinson of Addiction Recovery Care thanked the Chamber and Governor Bevin for seeing the economic importance of addiction treatment and second chances for Kentuckians.

The Workforce Summit showed business leaders the need for innovation to engage the available workforce and to attract talent earlier in the education process.
